SYNOPSIS

In the harsh winters of Northern Alberta, a young man struggles to protect his childhood dream of living on the trapline. Robert Grandjambe Jr. has spent his life on the trapline, learning from his mother, father and grandfather, and growing into the bushman he knew he always was. With encroaching industrial development and increasing family obligations, this may be his last chance to live his passion in the freedom of the wild. In a changing world, can the price of pursuing one’s passion become too high?
